

Artist Statement

Holden Denyer is an Immersive Media Design student at the University of Maryland. Through his studies, he gained an immense appreciation for space-making and creating a sense of flow. His work is defined by distinct edges which outline a simplification of the world around him; giving things rigidity, organizing them so that they feel balanced.

Whether on a digital canvas or a real-world switch board, Holden strives to create art that involves its audience, interactive by visual mechanics. Many of his works utilize a doodle-like style to encapsulate the real world and hyperfocus on the nuances of everyday life, formatting them for scientific discovery or a reconsideration of the flow of it all. He continues to enhance his work and define his personal style as he completes his studies and prepares to enter the world of design.
